Sometimes that ~~huge~~ enormous plane with a two floors and around 500 people on board is shaking like a scared bird. So hard to explain the unsafety you feel that moment. I went to have some water from stewardess: and when i was going through corridor i balanced like a circus star, on a new ~~to~~ leaked to the illuminators' around - i saw nothing but darkness.

Feeling powerless - i ran to buy a water. I ran. I ran and felt a drops of sweat
pouring down my neck.

I sung on a way to hostel.

I didn't care of sun
burning all over my shoulders anymore.

I sung being half-alive.
The sun at it's zenith.

We got dewatered.

We didn't have any rest.

We shoud've had to continue -
but we didn't have.

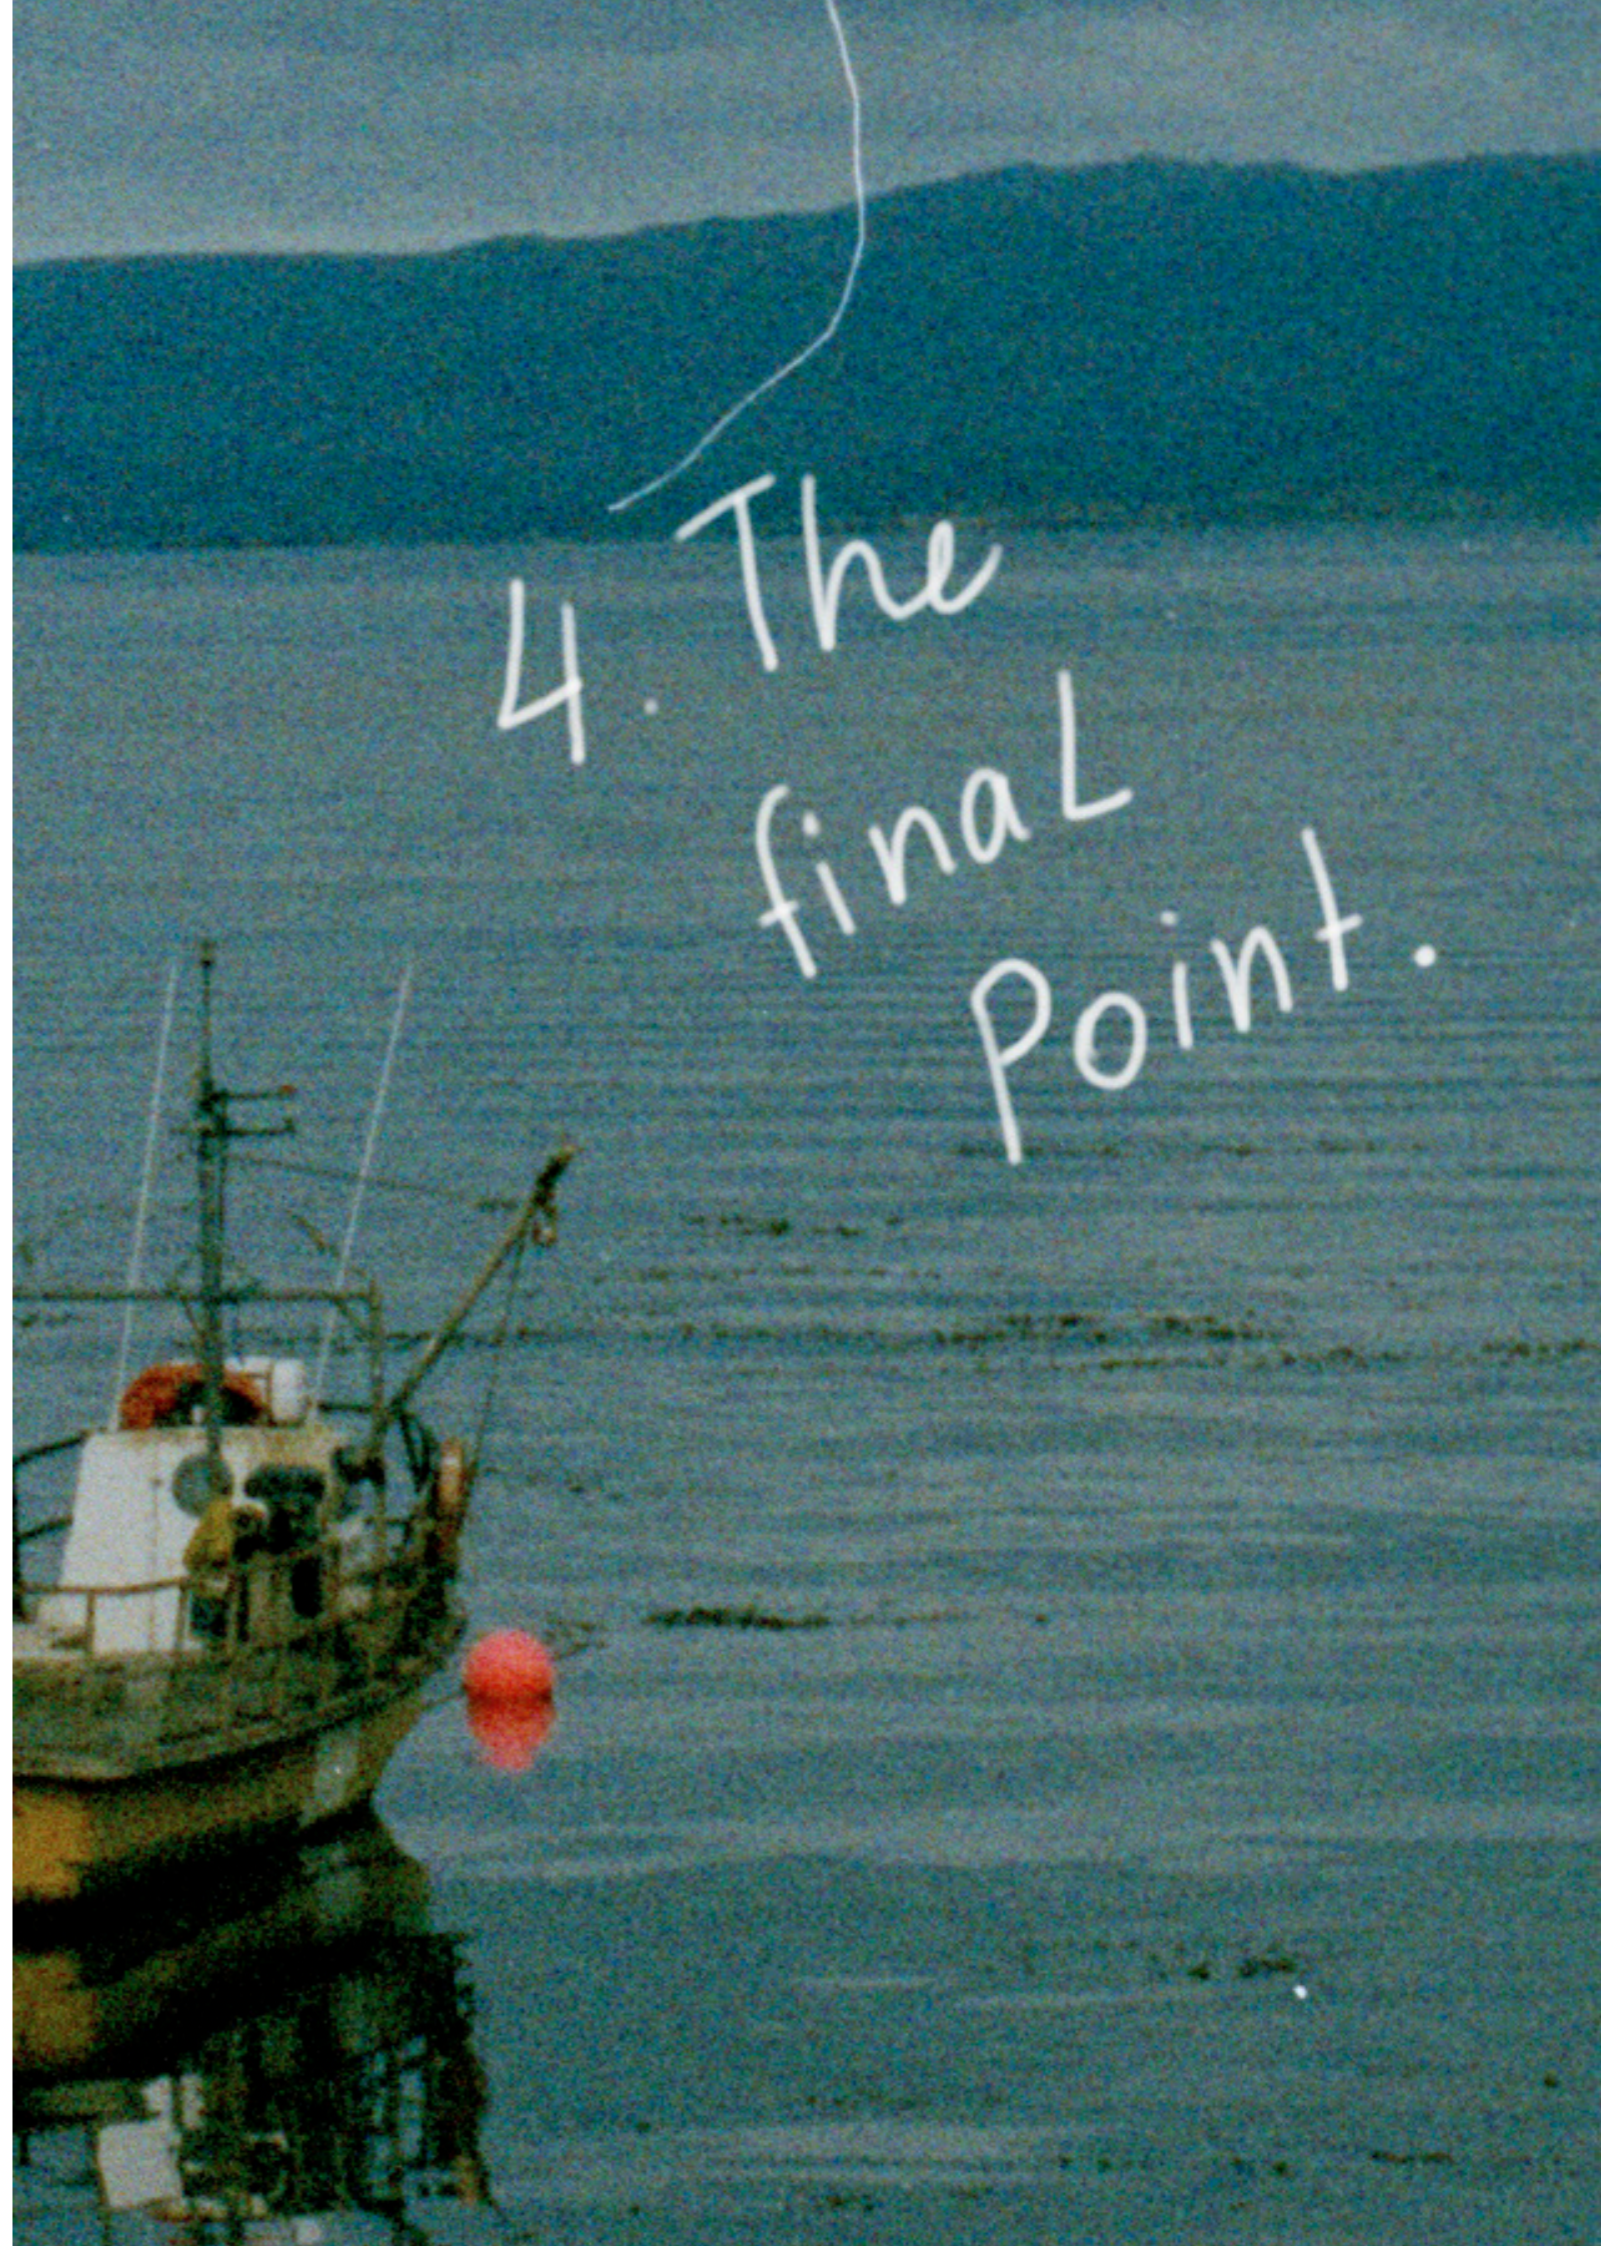

The next flight is at night.

God damn you,

Buenos-Aires!

4. The final point.

(This is a woman from a security guard which forced me to throw away my favorite touristic knife that i forgot to remove from a hand luggage. To be honest, this knife was totally blunt and in fact it could hardly cause more harm than a piece of paper can. Though it didn't convince her and she got angry and forced me to throw it away.

If once any of you will follow the same road and see this lady on a custom in airport-please, find this knife and bring it back to me. Blue one.)

At the morning I went downstairs to make some tea, but we haven't bought any food yet, so I asked the house owner if I can take some from the kitchen. He smiled, gave me a tea (té) sack, a cup, I said "thank you" and started to prepare the water to boil. But then this man smiled again, giggled, said "nooo!", grabbed the cup from my hands, pulled there some water from pipes and put this cup into the microwave, proudly saying "si! si!"

That day I decided to go to ~~the airport~~
the airport, but the weather was not the best. It got rainy,
cold, and the freezing Antarctic wind was scratching the skin with drops of an icy water. Around eleven kilometers by walk -
I thought I've gone mad.

And that is what i got at the end after all

- How many meters is the depth of a channel here? Approximately.
- Well, here is not even the deepest spot. About 90 meters. All around is something like 300-400 meters.
- Oh,sh*t.

Cold.

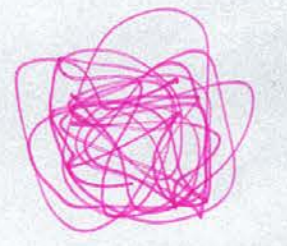

g. The length and width.

Go south.

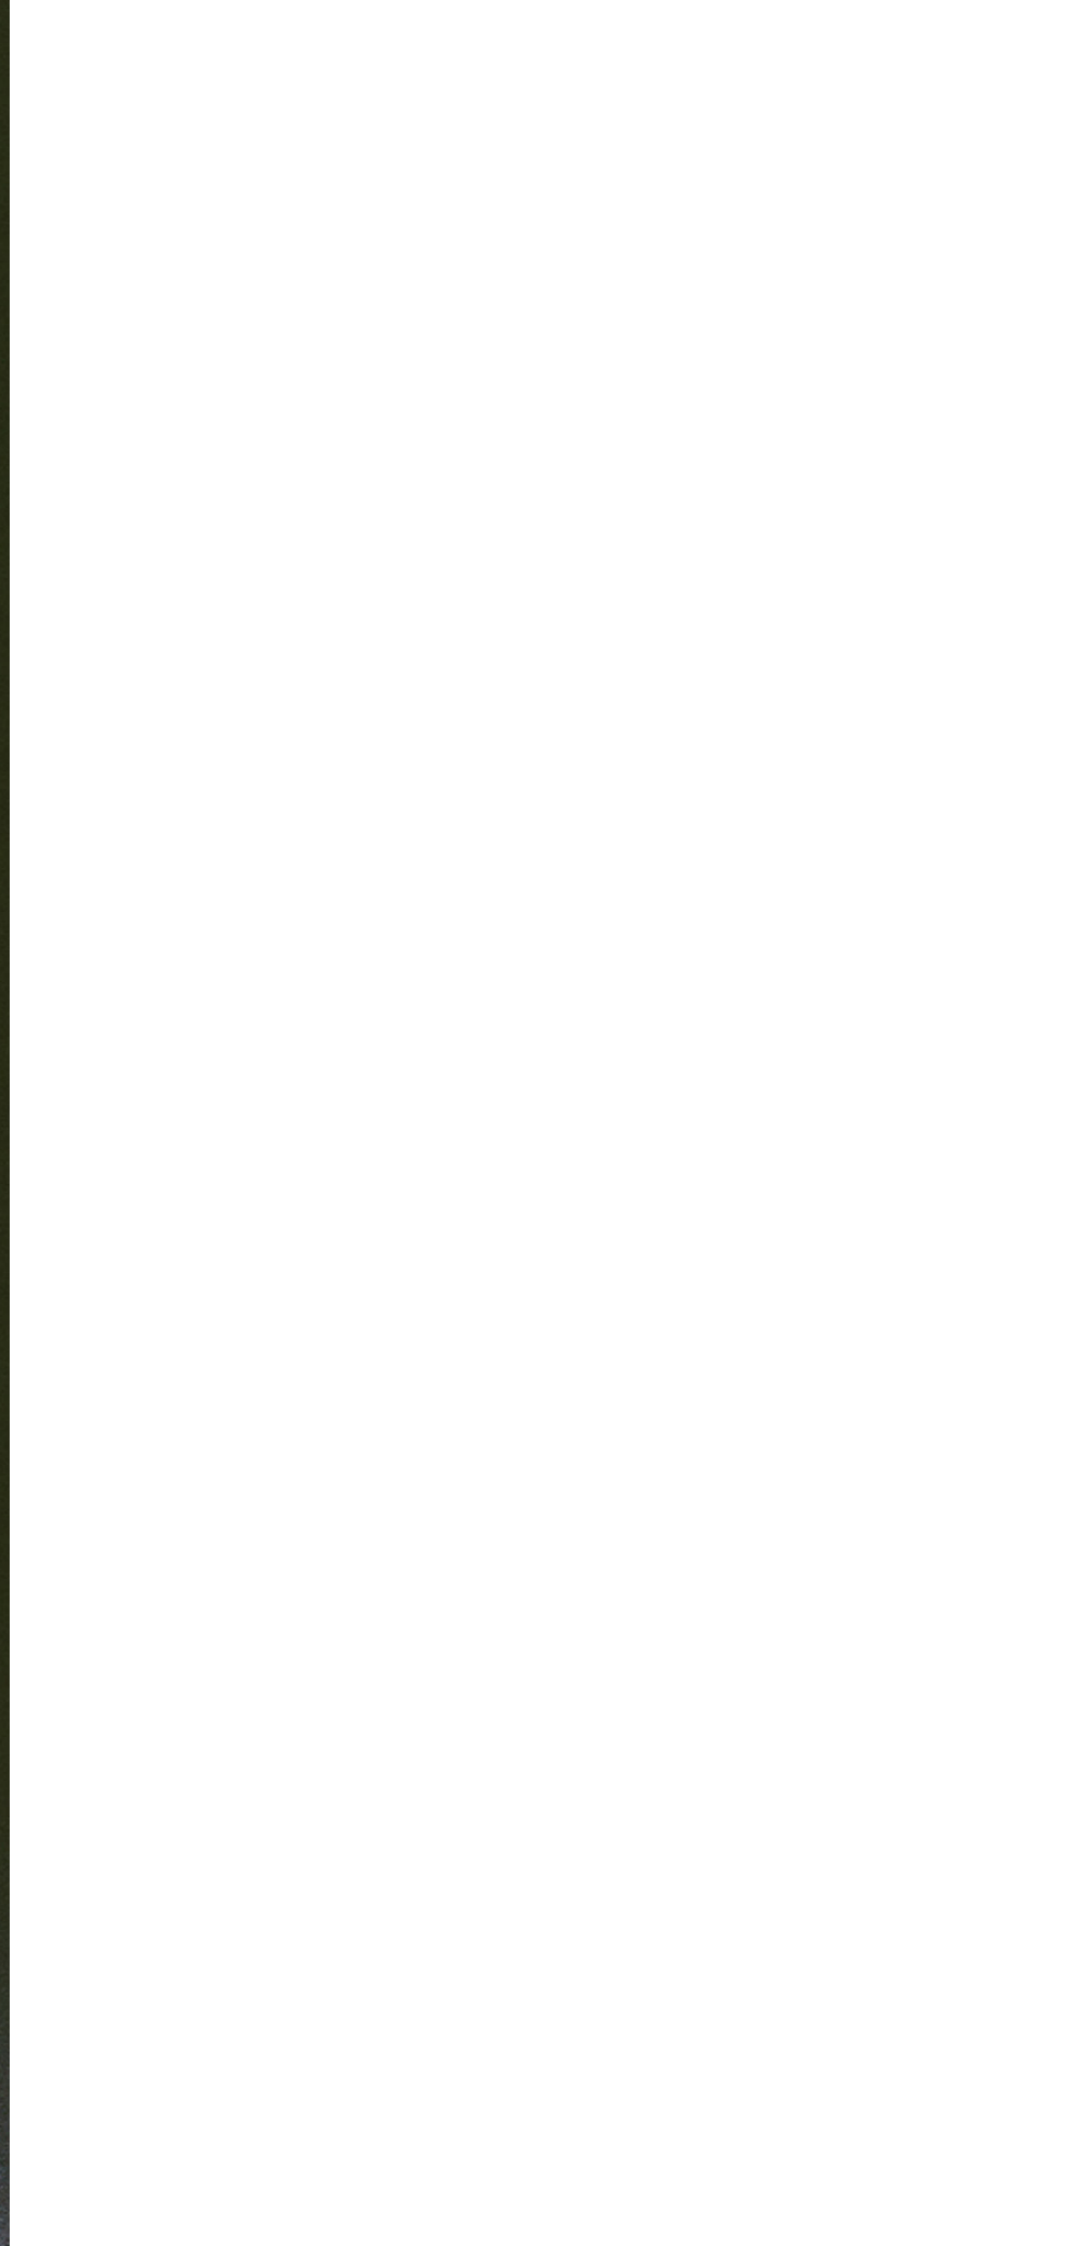

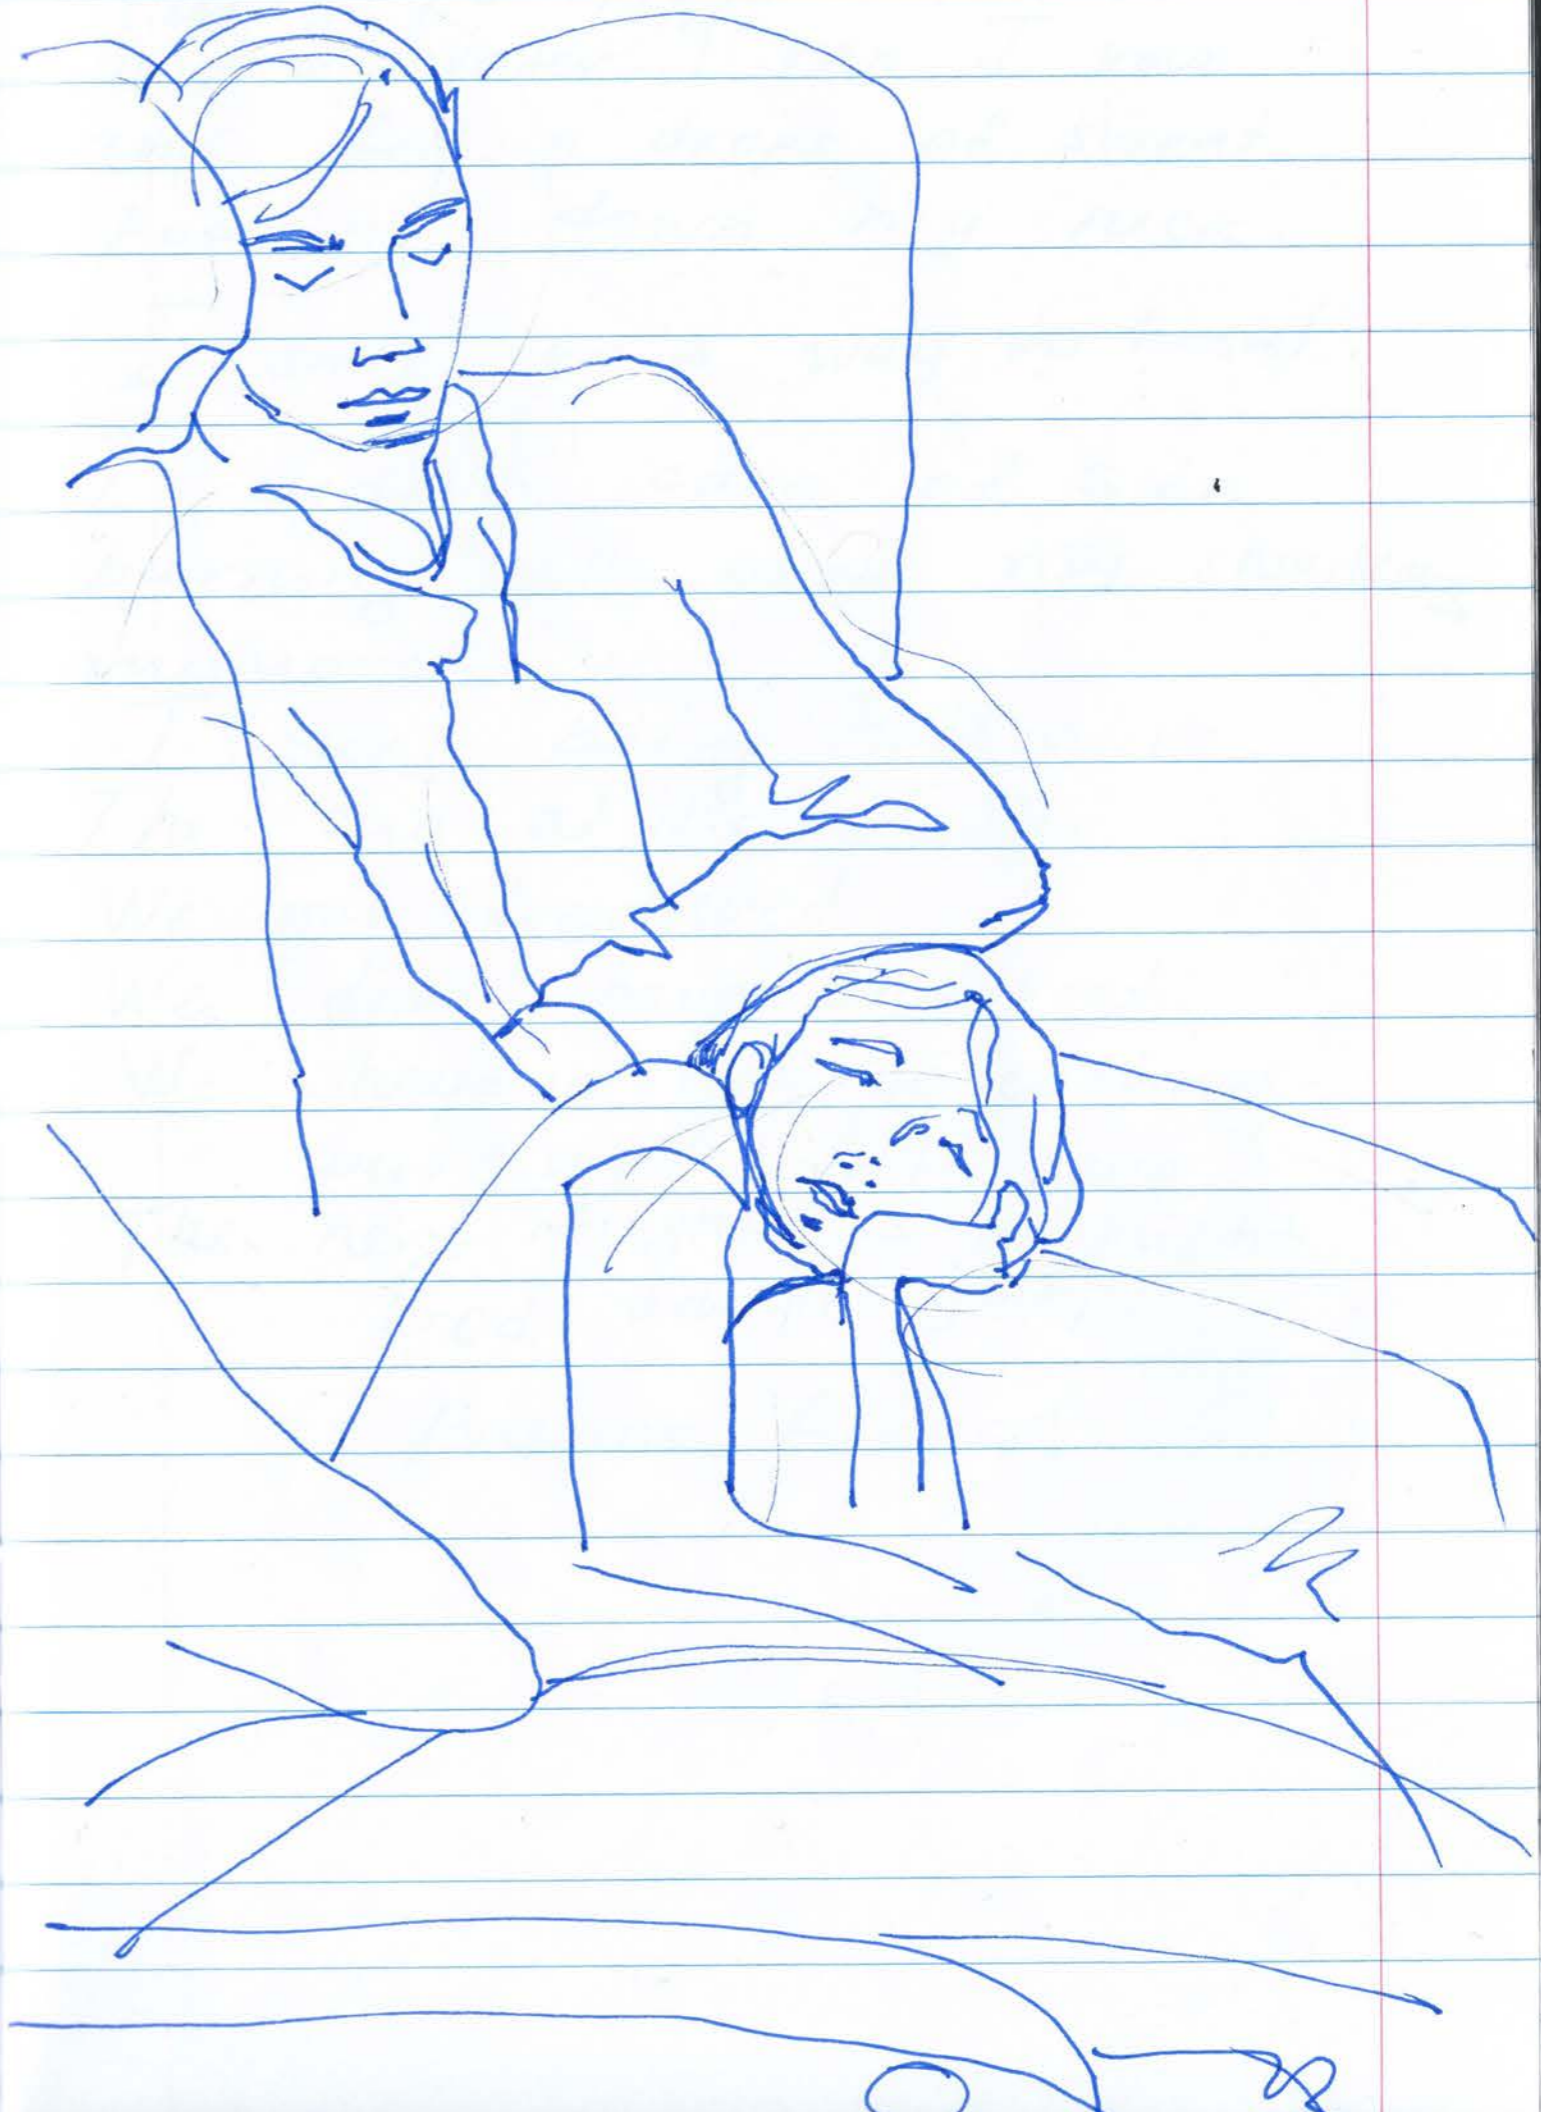

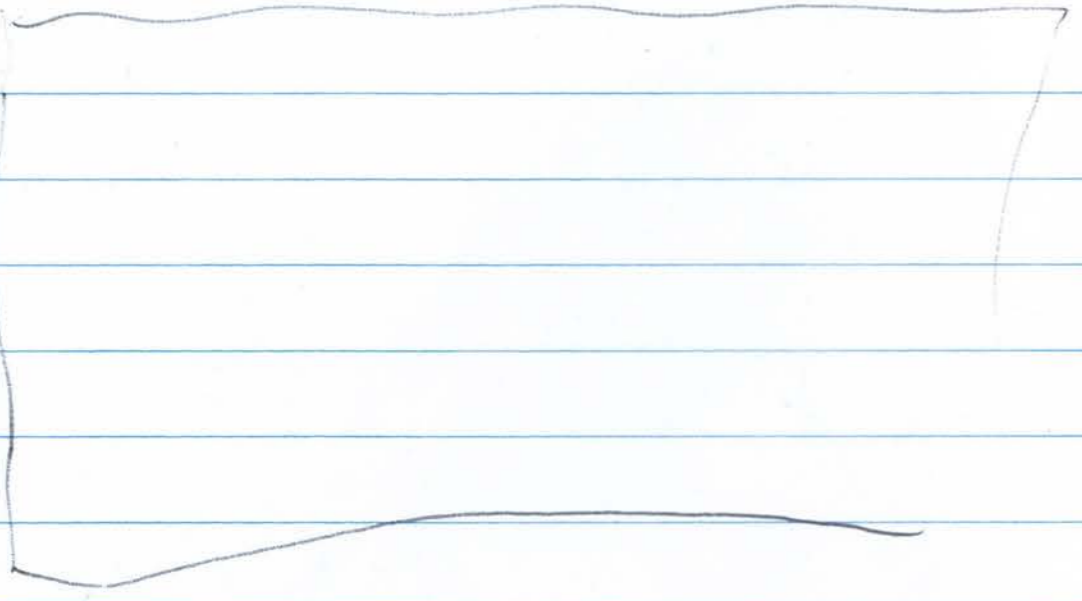

The amount of abandoned dogs in Ushuaia is incredibly big. In fact they aren't abandoned - these are just dogs that belong everywhere.

We have been followed by their crowd for two hours. At some point my friend just stopped and yelled "Go away ya'll! I do not love you anymore!" - and all the dogs had immediately ran apart and never got closer to us ever again.
